

Kerry and Kris

- OCTOBER 5, 2013 -

Though they'd always known they'd wed, Kerry and Kris, who were introduced by a mutual friend in 2002, were simply waiting for the timing to be right, "which, for us, just happened to be about 10 years," the bride says. Kris proposed to his beloved on bended knee at the top of a Colorado ski slope while fellow skiers applauded. "It was magical and I could not have imagined it being any better," Kerry says. A little over a year later, the pair celebrated with 150 friends and family members, who sat at tables named for the groom's favorite James Bond movies, and dined on filet mignon and shrimp, followed by slices from a magnificent four-tier wedding cake. The bride's favorite moment? "Our first dance after we were introduced as husband and wife," she recounts. "We danced to Aerosmith's 'Don't Want to Miss a Thing.'"
